

Long Bio

Curtis is the principal consultant at Connect ED, a program development, evaluation, and training company focused on upstream prevention and interdependent community building. Connect ED uses narrative processes to improve the mental, emotional, and behavioral health of organizations and communities. Curtis lives with his wife in Vancouver, WA. They have two grown children who live in Seattle. He is a reader, writer, teacher, cyclist, runner, carpenter, fixer, and coffee geek. He teaches Mental Health First Aid and Positive Discipline for parents, teachers and community members. He is a national trainer for the Sources of Strength youth suicide prevention program, founding member of the ACEs Action Alliance, lead evaluator for the Clackamas County Children's Center Child Abuse Prevention Initiative and adjunct professor at Concordia University - Portland.